

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a modular joint prosthesis for replacement of an affected joints and, particularly, an affected shoulder joint. The joint prosthesis of the current invention comprises a head having multiple components which can be

5 assembled with each other in-situ during the course of a surgery. Consequently, the patient implanted with the modular joint prosthesis would experience minimized incision, accelerated recovery, and decreased scarring.